

Cover Crop & Residue Management

Hudson Valley Carbon Farming Project

Two participants in the Hudson Valley Carbon Farming Project are planting cover crop and one is also managing their crop residue left on the field after harvest. Both of these practices increase soil organic matter and help to reduce erosion on the field during the months that a primary crop is not growing.

Cover crops planted on a field after the main crop has been harvested.

Corn stalk residue left on the field after harvest.